

Abstract

The invention relates to a code compression method that has a phase for treatment of model, the phase comprising a pruning phase and a growing phase combined into one phase. According to the method, test data can be used in estimation of the cost for the treatment of model when evaluating whether or not to apply a treatment of model in the phase for a certain code to be compressed according to the model.